Topic: Is it important to keep languages alive and not let them disappear? (Argumentative Essay)

Importance of Keeping Languages Alive

According to some research, there are approximately 7,000 languages spoken around the world. These languages decrease every year. There is plethora of reasons why languages vanish such as natural disasters, wars and assimilation. Language disappearance causes negative results. Therefore, not only individuals but also linguistics should fight for keeping languages alive. It is substantial not to let languages disappear because when languages are not kept alive, society not only loses communication skills but also loses traditions although some people assume that it is not consequential.

First of all, when languages perish, individuals are getting worse while expressing themselves because every language has different structures and sounds. To start with, language disappearance leads to the loss of personal identity and as a result of this, people have difficulty in communicating. Moreover, the more people use their languages, the less languages disappear. In other words, especially endangered languages should be taught to young people to prevent them from vanishing. Overall, if language disappearance can be avoided, people can verbalize themselves handily.

It is claimed that language evanescing is not a prominent issue. Nevertheless, the moment languages die out, traditions also disappear because owing to language disappearance, it is hard to access the traditions. When people do not speak their own languages, they start to forget their traditions. Therefore, languages are connected with traditions and they cannot be divorced from each other. All in all, for individuals to save their traditions, tis important to prevent languages from dying.

In conclusion, it is noteworthy to keep languages alive; otherwise, communication skills and traditions might be lost by society. In order not to lose the ability to express themselves, people should persist on speaking their own languages. If people speak their own languages more, the extinction of languages can be prevented. Languages are the fundamental part of the society. When a language dies out, society is becoming alienated. For these reasons, human beings ought to do their best for keeping languages alive. Every language is worth speaking and protecting. Each language is unique.
