Benefits of Handwriting

Nowadays, some people argue that handwriting does not make sense. They claim that it is unnecessary to use it and instead of handwriting, they should use typing on a computer. Nonetheless, typing is not as useful as handwriting for many reasons. People need to learn and use handwriting because of its pace and advantages about studying subjects, in spite of the arguments which support that people learn better when they are typing.

Pace is one of the most important reasons why handwriting is effective. First of all, people may need to be fast when they are writing in order not to miss anything or not to be late. In this case, the pace of handwriting may be very helpful for them because of the fact that handwriting is faster than typing. Additionally, it may be difficult to be fast when people are typing on a computer since not everybody has enough experience of using a computer. Thus, the pace of handwriting is one of the reasons why people should use handwriting.

Although studying a subject is one of the most significant benefits of handwriting, some people claim that typing is more useful for it. They accept that they can be more successful when they are typing. Nevertheless, people, especially children, learn better if they use handwriting instead of typing when they want to study a subject. For example, if children get prepared to their exam by writing the topics by hand, they can be more successful in the exam because when they are writing with their hands, their brains directly comprehend the topics. Therefore, if people want to reach success in their school life, it is needed to use handwriting.

Due to the benefits of handwriting such as speed and clarity, people ought to learn and use it instead of typing. Firstly, if children are not quick during lessons, they cannot catch
